THE ARISTOCRACY OF LABOR.

Granting the motives to be of the best and the purposes of the order the most desirable, we cannot agree with The Marinette Eagle that the Knights of Labor give substantial promise of solving the problem of labor inequalities or of offering relief to the labor now victim of injustice through monopoly and of growing competition in the labor market combined.

This contemporary is an avowed advocate for the Knights. Its editor is prominent in the order. And it is a fault not uncommon in the noble order to study the result to find the problem instead of the problem to find the result.

The primary basis of the argument of the editor knight at Marinette is the proposition that the price of skilled labor is fixed proportionately high or low according as the price of unskilled labor is high or low. This much being true it would certainly follow, as the Marinette editor assumes, that the interests of skilled and unskilled labor are common interests and that skilled labor, acting intelligently, must per force of necessity and human selfishness uphold the common laborer. But the price of labor—like the price of every commodity needful to man's existence, comfort or convenience—is fixed by the law of supply and demand. It was by intelligent recognition of this law that monopoly has been fostered and entrenched behind seemingly impregnable defenses. It is in the ignoring of this law that the Knights of Labor and other similar organizations will find their greatest and most imminent danger as they have heretofore found their most signal defeats. So far there is no conflict with, indeed the facts seem to lead to, the theory of the Marinette knight that there are simply two classes, capitalists on the one side and laborers on the other—capital representing the demand and labor the supply. The assumption is more honest, but quite as erroneous, as the one advanced so often by toadies to the money power, or by superficial thinkers, that the interests of capital and labor are identical. That the conclusion of common interests is based upon false reasoning is shown by the readiness with which it is repudiated by skilled labor, representing the higher intelligence, when put to the test. That the interests of skilled and unskilled labor are not common as against capital, and especially that the price of skilled labor depends not upon the value of unskilled labor but upon the supply of skilled labor itself, needs no stronger evidence than is being offered by the order of Knights. What means the sloughing off from the parent organization of thousands? What brings about the order of "Improved Knights of Labor?" Was it a common interest which sent the rabble of unskilled labor to enforce idleness upon the skilled labor in Allis' and the Bay View shops which had secured satisfactory arrangements with the employing capitalists?

It will not do. Capital and labor have like interests in that neither can profit without employment. Beyond that their interests are diametically opposed to each other. As much is true of skilled and unskilled labor, based upon the unpleasant but undeniable fact that human selfishness is a stronger bond than human love and benevolence in most modern brotherhoods, whether composed of capitalists or laborers. It is patriotic to uphold the constitution which declares that all men are born free and equal. The street waif jostled under foot by the airing coach for milady's pet emphasizes the palpable lie. Chang the giant and Thumb the dwarf may draw equal salaries for dime museum idleness, but the plodding mule will not appraise in value with the thoroughbred race horse. The dunghill may add to or determine the richness of the rose geranium but it can never adorn the vase nor infest the parlor with its odor. Aristocracies exist in nature everywhere. The best that human may hope is to reach the grade of the animal, vegetable and mineral and avoid the shoddy.

CHAIRMAN WALKER'S SUCCESSOR.

Since the appointment of two successive chairmen of the Wisconsin democratic state committee to lucrative and honorable positions, there has developed a perceptible lack of coyness among the faithful in regard to accepting that heretofore thankless and unsalaried office. A successor to Chairman Walker is soon to be elected, and, without anybody in search of a man that anybody else seems to be aware of, a full dozen names are already presented for committee consideration.

Strangely enough, these names, with the exception of L. R. Larson, of Eau Claire, are suggestive of factional support—or none at all. Not so remarkable, in reach of democratic party history in this state, the man most likely to be of value to the party in a campaign, and who would bring something to the office besides an inordinate appetite or a jaundiced jealousy, hasn't been mentioned.

We have reference to Mr. Ellis B. Usher, of The La Crosse Chronicle.

Mr. Usher is young, but he is not vealy. He is partisan, but he is not bigoted. He is energetic, but not rash. He has a wide acquaintance with the brain men of his party, but not entangling alliances or interests with any of them. He would rather fight on a principle and lose than to win on a pretension. He doesn't want the place, and can't afford to take it.

Such a man as chairman would offer a novel and wide departure from approved campaigning in Wisconsin, would he not?

The prohibitionists are credited with paying their chairman $2,000 per annum. He earns it. Our republican friends are believed to know the value of brains and work from a cash standpoint. What will the poor old Wisconsin democracy do?

A VERY serious mistake may be made in the movement to secure the payment of salaries to aldermen. That men capable of serving the city with ability and honesty are cheap enough at $500 per annum will not be disputed, but it is equally clear that to men so qualified the sum of $500 would be no particular object. Nor would the payment of such a salary improve the services of incompetent or dishonest aldermen. City government will be reformed only when it ceases to be a part of the political party machine, and it will be secured not by act of legislature or by city ordinance, but through interest of taxpaying citizens at the polls.

THE hungry and thirsty democrats who insist that if Cleveland is re-elected it will not be by democratic votes, may as well remember that he didn't get democratic votes enough to elect him in '84. The republican spoilsmen may be willing to inform the disappointed office-hunters that however impractical the mugwumps are as reformers, they are practical enough at the polls and neither timid nor blind.

AFTER the first swirl of excitement is past it will probably develop that a government which can survive a Gladstone's downfall does not hinge its existence upon a Lord Randolph Churchill.

WHISPERS AND DREAMINGS.

Few of the good resolutions of yesterday will ever be pasted in summer hats.

Mr. Blaine's friends having succeeded in burying Mr. Logan, Mr. Logan's friends are talking of returning the compliment.

The Boston clergy having passed their opinion that the ballet is immoral might give the world their estimate of Parson Downs.

If the members of the labor party in the legislature can't see anything else they can do for their constituents they can get 'em railroad passes.

The weather indications today are that Mr. Jerry R. Brigham and Mr. John Luchsinger will not be elected speaker of the next Wisconsin assembly.

If hanging does make martyrs of the Chicago anarchists, they will be quite as well off as the bomb-shattered policemen, and a dead martyr is a more desirable member of society than a live anarchist.

We are confident that the raising of a popular fund for Mrs. Logan will bring Mr. R. B. Hayes prominently before the public again. On occasions of this kind Rutherford is always celebrated for the amount he doesn't give.

Mr. H. H. Warner may only be working one of his unique advertising schemes in becoming a candidate for a seat in the senate from New York, but he can't have any monopoly of it. Wood-pulp Miller and Morton deal in political Safe remedies some themselves.

Patti couldn't sing the first night in Mexico owing to the rarity of the atmosphere. On the other hand, Ministers Manning and Sedgwick attribute their uncontrollable desire to sing to the exhilarating effects of the climate. That Mexican climate seems to be good for pretty much everything.

First citizen: Pret' col' smornin'.
Second same: Yep; twenty below.
Naw, not s'cold 'sthat.
Sure! I saw a man in West-side street car with th'mom'ter registered twenty-five below and when 'ts twenty-five in West-side car y'can bet yer life its at least twenty b'low outdoor.

There is more interest in the wholly unimportant question as to who will receive the nomination for United States senator in the Wisconsin democratic legislative caucus than there is in the important question of how or why Senator Sawyer has gained possession of the majority. There was a fable once written of the dog which lost his piece of meat by jumping after the shadow of it in the stream. The Wisconsin democracy is, we believe, the only animal which could improve upon that fable in pointing that particular moral, and it does it by regularly performing the remarkable feat of biting its own head off in snapping at the shadow.

PERSONAL GOSSIP.

Emperor William last Saturday celebrated the eightieth anniversary of his entrance into the army.

The auditors have made a report to the Fenian brotherhood, exonerating O'Donovan Rossa from all charges of misappropriation of funds intrusted to him.

A Dowdy-looking Queen.

A brilliant company was assembled, awaiting her majesty, says The Cleveland Leader. At last there was a commotion and I supposed the queen was coming. I looked earnestly for some appearance of royalty, but saw only a stout, elderly lady, whose self and toilet I thought would have made a good caricature for Punch as "The British Matron Abroad." She was very short, both of stature and breath, and her face was red and cross.

Her toilet consisted of a large, gaily-plaided poplin, so short in the skirt as to expose the tops of a pair of heavy walking shoes. A long, loose velvet sacque fitted so tightly over the full dress that it gave the wearer's figure a barrel-like appearance, and a dark green hat of uncut velvet, its plumage draggled by rain and blown by the wind, was worn on a head that did not suggest familiarity with a crown; but the finishing blemish was a huge muff of royal ermine suspended round the lady's fat neck by a cord, and which, not being in use, wobbled helplessly back and forth over her well-rounded body.

"Who is that funny, fussy woman?" I asked laughingly of my naval escort, a British officer.

"Good heavens, madame!" said he, in a low voice "that is our gracious sovereign"!

Too Many Unions in the Family.
Chicago Herald.

Boycotting has been carried to a grotesque extreme in Galveston, where a woman who worked as a union printer married a non-union printer and was put under the ban. As the husband would not join the union the wife left him at the command of her associates, and will sue for divorce. In holy writ a faint hope is held out for the man who has a believing wife, but in trade unionisms such things do not appear to count.

STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE.

Ella Wheeler and Mrs. Leslie—Judge Sloan's Struggle with Latin.

According to the Washington correspondent of a New York paper, "Mrs. Vilas is Mrs. Cleveland's favorite among the cabinet ladies, while Mr. Vilas is nearer to the president and more agreeable to him than any of the cabinet."

It is reported that during the earthquakes at Charleston, an elderly colored man, who had just rushed from his crumbling cabin and reached an open place, from which he could see the houses performing a sort of wired dance, dropped down on his knees and began to pray thus: "O, Lawd, come right down quick and stay wid my family. Don't send your son, but come yourself dis time. Dis am no child's play."

The rumor that Mr. Jay Gould has been negotiating for admittance into the "inner circle" of New York for his son George and the beautiful Mrs. George is not yet known as a fact. But friends of the Goulds who would like to see them coruscate and catch some of the glimmer of the coruscations, says a New York paper, hope that Mr. and Mrs. George Gould may yet break the barriers with a magnificent ball, to be given about Easter. I deny that there are negotiations. But, if there are, the Gould ball will put the past glories of the Vanderbilt affair into the shade.

The Rev. Dr. McGlynn, who is just now under a little frown of disapproval on the part of the church at Rome, is always in demand as a guest at dinners, being a capital entertainer. It is doubtful if in all his experience he was ever thrown into such a varied company as at a recent dinner given by the Marquis de Mores. There were only three guests besides Dr. McGlynn. There was Henry George, the labor agitator; Col. Tom Ochiltree, the best raconteur and the biggest story-teller in the country; and the Baron de Selliere, who carries a burden of $5,000,000 in debts with the greatest ease.

The Duke of Sutherland is still with us, says The New York Star. He is not much to look at, it is true—no tawny, leonine beard, no magnificent length of limb, or haughty crest, after the manner of Ouida's dukes. In fact, he is rather lumpish. I remember seeing him first some years ago in the big dining-room of the Riggs house in Washington, in company with Bull Run Russell and two other well-known personages, and hearing him wonder if American women didn't drink b. and s. in their own rooms, since there was nothing to drink on any of the dining tables. It is to be hoped that New York society will let him alone. I can recall the picture of the little group around the table in the bay window. The duke wore on that occasion a costume similar to the one he attempted to introduce at a famous wedding, accompanied by a singular-looking female not invited by the host. He really cannot understand "why people who were cobblers a hundred years ago should care to know a duke anyhow." People who have met him reciprocate.

Mrs. Frank Leslie gives constant supervision to her vast business interests, yet finds a good deal of time to devote to society and friends. One of the latter is Mrs. Ella Wheeler-Wilcox, the poetess, who is often her guest, and is to be with her again in January. Mrs. Wilcox carries portraits of her husband, Mr. Robert M. Wilcox, of Meriden, with her wherever she goes. "You seem to be in love with your husband," some one said to her a few days ago. "O, yes," she said, "I am very unconventional in that respect." A lady who recently met the poetess at Mrs. Leslie's says: "Ella Wheeler in reality is a delightful surprise. She is small and fair-haired, rather slight, gray-eyed and rather pale. She talks easily and well, and is particularly free in what you might call her literary confessions. She lays no claim to having read those things whereof she speaks in books, but admits that she is in herself an impulsive, warm-hearted woman, who feels and knows what she is writing about. Her first poems, she says, were written in the midst of an excitable and passionate girlhood, when all men were knights and all ladies were fair. She was utterly surprised at the criticism they called forth from a knowing world, but she was so firm in her belief that the things whereof she spoke were right and honorable feelings that she kept to them, and tried with all her might to keep her ideal clear and unsullied till she found it perfect in the man she wished to marry; she married; and Mrs. Wilcox is a very happy woman. The adoration of Mr. Wilcox, and his sympathy with her success is an acknowledged fact among all who know them. The poems Mrs. Wilcox has written since her marriage are in every respect equal to those with which she startled the world a number of years ago. In fact, I think the best I have ever known of hers was one she read at Mrs. Leslie's the other night. It turned upon the well-known pessimistic creed that in two people bound together there is always one who is loved and one who is the lover. Although she has done so well with the subject, Mrs. Wilcox sharply denies that she believes what she has said, or rather believes it to be the universal rule. As yet she has not lost her faith in the true love that runneth smoothly."

NOTICES OF MAGAZINES.

The New Year's number of The Century is replete with interesting reading matter illustrated by excellent cuts, "French Sculptors" is as ably prepared as the excellent paper on the subject, in the December number "Comets and Meteors," by Prof. Langley, is entertaining, even to persons not acquainted with astronomy, and its accuracy cannot be questioned. The story of Abraham Lincoln's life is continued and no falling off in its excellence is observable. "The Relative Strength and Weakness of Nations," by Edward Atkinson, presents some new and rather startling ideas. A dozen other papers of merit, almost equal to those mentioned, are included in the number.

The January number of The Cosmopolitan contains a remarkably bright and interesting series of articles. Lovers of fiction should not fail to read "Signor Io," the third and fourth chapter of which are published in this number. This story was written by Salvatore Farina, the Italian novelist, and is the most remarkable and fascinating of his works. Mr. Frank G. Carpenter's article on "The Real Martha Washington" presents a new, interesting and unconventional view of the wife of the first president. An illustrated article entitled, "From Beirut to Baalbec," by the Rev. L. B. Platt, is a lively and humorous description of a trip on horse-back between these cities. The scenes and customs that he describes are very curious and amusing. The number contains many other articles, poems, etc., by well-known writers. Schlicht & Field Co., publishers, Rochester, N. Y.
